

Christoph Caselitz

President of Mobile Networks, Siemens Communications

Christoph Caselitz was born in Fulda, Germany on November 16, 1961. After studying law and business administration at the Ludwig-Maximilian University in Munich, he began his professional career in 1990 at Siemens AG, where he was involved in strategy development. In 1993 he moved to Mergers & Acquisitions, where he gained experience in the field of integration and communication management.

In 1997 he took over as head of business administration for the Analogue Products Subdivision of the Private Networks Group.

From 1999 he headed up the Cordless Product Division of Siemens Information and Communication Mobile. Under his leadership the brand has moved up to become the clear number one on the market for digital cordless products.

Since 2003 he has been responsible as head of the Mobile Networks Division at Siemens Communications for the overall strategy and development of mobile network infrastructure across all standards.

Christoph Caselitz is married and the father of two children; he and his family live in Munich. His hobbies are jogging, skiing, listening to music and going to the theater.

June 2006